St. Werburgh Street. Chester is one of the most visited towns in Great Britain, its antiquity, its interesting history, and existing links with the past doubtless accounting for the greater part of its popularity. The city still possesses ancient walls of Saxon or Roman origin, has a magnificent and beautiful cathedral and streets containing some of the most perfect specimens of half-timbered architecture in the kingdom. The name Chester is derived from the Roman "castra," it being the site of a Roman camp from about A.D. 60.
